

ACH Pull

Automated Clearing House (ACH) is an electronic digital network for financial transactions in the United States. ACH processes large volumes of credit and debit transactions. ACH Pull transfers also include new applications such as Real-Time ACH and more (see ACH transaction types). Businesses increasingly use ACH Pull and ACH to have clients pay, rather than via credit or debit cards. ACH is a computer-based clearing and settlement facility established to process the exchange of electronic transactions between participating depository institutions. Account-to-account (A2A) transfers utilize a system connected to every transaction participant through all U.S.-based financial institutions. With ACH Pull, funds are available for use by the receiver same-day. Most Same-Day ACH transactions are "Credit Push" or "Debit Pull".
